In a Nutshell

Olivia is a goddess! According to some (her vet), she's got an attitude that proves she knows this. But, as long as you mind your P's and Q's (like don't poke or prod her), she's quite lavish with her affection.

Olivia

From the beginning...

Olivia's name came about because she has 'movie star' looks (think Olivia Wilde - the eyes) and regal attitude (Olivia de Havilland - her roles). She's got seductive aquamarine eyes, a flirtatious swing to her hips and tail when she walks and her coat is as superb as a royal robe. She takes her time warming up to people, perhaps the Siamese in her, but once she accepts you, she's an absolute love. She is one of the first to greet me whenever I come into a room, usually by running to me. She's dainty and at first glance a little prissy, but when she plays, look out!

It took her a while to be comfortable with us, but we went slow and let her set the pace of her boldness. As days passed, she started to put herself forward with us, demanding to be in the prime lap spot, climbing on top of whichever of her litter mates was presently there. She would lean up against us, and look up with those astonishing eyes, sweetly purring and pressing herself against us.

Olivia

She's fairly tiny despite her spectacular coat, and she loves to be held and cuddled. When she wants my attention, she'll come up next to me, put her paws on my shoulder and reach her nose right up to my face and purr. She also has a tiny little meow, sometimes nearly silent, when she speaks to me. She kneads on me without claws when she's curling next to me (or on top of me) for sleep.

She loves to play, and she plays hard. She can be quite fierce with her siblings. She adores chasing the cat dancer and she's super fast! She also likes the marbles embedded in the base of the scratching post. (check out this youtube video: https://youtu.be/AyJ0_LeLqk) She's happiest when she's in your lap being cuddled. She likes hugs and kisses and cooing, especially if you're telling her how lovely she is.

Olivia is fastidious with excellent personal grooming and litter box habits. She likes to watch me scoop the litter boxes and makes sure I do a thorough job. She enjoys being brushed, though seems a little ticklish on her legs. She also loves to help me sweep up her room. She chases the broom and whatever it's pushing along. Frankly, this isn't especially helpful, but she has such fun!

Olivia

She's active and very playful, but also wants to be held in your lap and stroked if you sit down with her. Her purr comes easily, and is very quiet, but distinct. I don't know how she would respond to children. Perhaps if they are very calm and not overly noisy. She is frightened by sudden, unexpected movement or noise.

Olivia usually chooses to sleep alone, rather than with any of her siblings. However, if we're available, she's most happy to be in our lap or laying immediately next to us to nap.

As She Moves On

Olivia seems like she'd enjoy being an only cat. While she's enjoyed playing with her litter mates, she's very interested in having my focus on her. Though there's a full wall of windows onto a balcony with plants, bugs and birds, she's never exhibited an interest in what's outside. With her pale coloring, it would certainly be best if she were an indoor kitty and I think she'd prefer that too.

OLIVIA'S LOVE IS WORTH TAKING THE TIME TO EARN. SHE'S LOYAL AND VERY AFFECTIONATE!
